Tax Controversy

Susan practices tax law in the Corporate & Securities section of the Houston office. Susan has the proven ability to quickly understand sophisticated tax scenarios, the underlying nuances and weak areas, and craft persuasive advocacy positions, and implement them to win cases. Susan represents corporations, partnerships, high wealth individuals and estates before the Internal Revenue Service in Examination, Appeals, penalty and collections proceedings. Clients include large to mid-sized locally owned businesses, hospitals and other large non-profits, as well as Fortune 100 companies.

Susan represents a variety of tax-exempt, charitable organizations, including private foundations and public charities. She has practiced tax law in multiple sophisticated environments, providing her with a breadth of experience that allows her to best serve her clients' needs.

In addition to her tax practice, Susan regularly drafts surrogacy agreements, embryo, egg and sperm donation agreements on behalf of prospective intended parents, gestational carriers and egg donors. She is equipped to handle the court process to declare intended parents as legal parents of a child. She works with all persons, including LGBTQ, seeking to form families.

Prior to joining Munsch Hardt, Susan served as in-house at a large oil and gas company. She currently serves as Mayor of West University Place, which has provided her with numerous quality contacts within the city and with other legislative bodies.

Experience

IRS Tax Controversy

Represented a Major League Baseball team that deferred its income from advance season ticket sales (and the minimal associated expenses) until the related games were played. The IRS sought to require immediate inclusion of the ticket revenue. The Tax Court ruled in favor of the baseball team/taxpayer. The Tax Court rejected the IRS's argument that under Schlude v. Commissioner, the Taxpayer was required to include the prepayments, and applied Artnell Co. v. Commissioner, since the receipts would have had to be refunded if the Taxpayer did not play the season, the facts of the case fit within the narrow Artnell exception to the Schlude principle.

R&D Tax Credit

Settled the multi-year R&D statistical sample audit for a Fortune 50 company. Although the expectation was that none of the 150 stat sample projects would be resolved during audit, our team was able to resolve 100%, saving staff time and outside expenses. Final stat sample results vastly exceeded expectations. The disallowance totaled only 19% of the originally filed QREs, which totaled in the hundreds of millions of dollars.

IRS Tax Controversy

Represented the IRS against a professional basketball player who created a personal services corporation similar to the one in Sargent v. Commissioner, which involved a professional hockey player). The Tax Court held for the IRS. Allen Leavell who played for the Houston Rockets in the NBA created a PSC for his services as a professional basketball player and to market his personal appearances and endorsement opportunities. Leavell was not only the sole shareholder of the PSC but also served as its president and treasurer. The Tax Court, while rejecting the ratio laid down in Sargent, took note of the authority of the Houston Rockets and the NBA to directly control Leavell's on court services and concluded that Leavell was an employee of the Houston Rockets and not his PSC, and that the payments made to his PSC should be considered personal income and be subject to Income Tax. Leavell v. Commissioner 104 T.C. 140 (1995).

Texas Comptroller Ruling

Represented a tenant in securing an exemption certificate from the Texas Comptroller of Public Accountants for improvements made to its terminal at the Port of Houston. Under the exemption, the client may provide contractors with an exemption certificate under Rule 3.291(c)(5).
